BOST. BLDGS A-Z - POND BUILDING -

23 The Pond Building at Merchants Row and South Market Street reveals the influence of Alexander Parris, architect for the neighboring 1824 Faneuil Hall Markets. Like the Markets, the Pond Building, which dates from 1853, is of load-bearing granite block construction in the Greek Revival style. However, the newer building is more austere than the Markets. Boston popularly recognizes it as Sanborn's Fish Market.

Q. Which is taller: the John Hancock Building or the Prudential Tower? Which was built most recently? – J.S., Boston.

A. The John Hancock Building is 790 feet tall and has 60 stories. The Pru is 750 feet high, with 52 stories. The Pru was dedicated in April 1965, although employees of the Prudential Insurance Co. and other tenants had already begun moving in at an earlier date. Dedication of the Hancock Tower was held in October 1976, but again employees and tenants were already occupying the building.

BOSTON · BLDGS - A-Z .

20 The Richards Building, built around 1867 at 110-116 State Street is noteworthy for its cast-iron facade and design. Cast-iron employed standardized pieces that were bolted together at the site, similar to today's modular construction. The strength of the iron permitted large window areas, and the standardization allowed the architect to select among many styles of architecture. The choice for the Richards Building was Italianate with a series of round-arched windows resembling an arcade on the upper floors. This cast-iron facade is one of the few remaining in Boston.

article about the closing the ropewalk in the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Boston. Bldg A-Z. Rope Walks

5 ropewalks were destroyed by fire in 1794 at Pearl & Atkinson (now Pearl) Sts. The city gave ropemakers land on site of present Public Gardens. In 1819 these ropewalks were also burned. Owners decided not to rebuild, but to cut up land for building lots. Citizens voted against this scheme & saved land for Public use as gardens.
